The aim of this study was to evaluate the impact of angiotensin-converting enzyme (ACE) insertion/deletion (I/D) polymorphism on early and long-term prognosis in the acute phase of ST-elevation acute coronary syndrome (STEMI) patients treated with primary percutaneous coronary intervention (PPCI). The ACE I/D polymorphism was detected by a multiplex polymerase chain reaction assay in 169 patients with STEMI treated with PPCI and underwent follow-up at 1 year. After PPCI, in-hospital major adverse cardiac events (MACE) occurred in 37.2% of DD, 32.1% of ID, and 36.8% of II patients (P = 0.9). After 1 year of follow-up, MACE occurred in 25% of DD, 19% of ID, and 21% of II patients (P = 0.5). In multivariate analysis, ACE I/D polymorphism was not related to the occurrence of early and long-term MACE. In STEMI patients undergoing PPCI, the I/D polymorphism of the ACE gene is not associated with in-hospital or 1-year MACE.Q: Can the red end of the colour wheel be darker? I'm an artist who doesn't use colour wheels. I make it a point to try my best to remember the primary, secondary, and tertiary colours as well as I can. For example, when making a piece I come up with my colours and I make them as balanced as possible. When I was creating these test pieces I remembered the other colours. However, there is one I'm not sure about. I don't want to just say that it's not correct, because maybe someone else can look at it and tell me if that's right. First off, let me say that a tester will tell me that both of them are correct. Both colours are correct. If you look at this colour wheel, the red end of it is very dark compared to all the other colours. I know ba244e880a
