That was maybe a bit of a challenge for an actor.... I think he was a little bit shy about it and a little bit overwhelmed." He went on to say: "There are certain clichés associated with the role of King Arthur... and when you first watch a performance of that sort you are kind of conditioned to expect one thing. But what I hope people will take away from this is a sense that a real gentleman, a real king, is someone who's not afraid to show emotion, to show vulnerability and to show pain. It's just so very easy to find that in him."
