The purpose of this proposal is to develop a highly interactive educational/research training experience for MD/PhD candidates that will increase their potential to become independent investigators in nephrology. This will be accomplished through hands-on research experience in the laboratory of a Nephrology Division faculty member in conjunction with formal course work that will focus on important nephrology topics and specialized research techniques. Specifically, the training program will provide an intensive 5-6 week research experience, a formal course work experience and a long-term mentored research experience in nephrology to the graduate students. The proposed training program will recruit eight MD/PhD students in the first year of a four-year program. The major aspect of the training experience will be participation in research on specific problems of nephrology with the goal of addressing an important problem in the nephrologist's chosen field. A second major aspect of the program will be didactic instruction in nephrology and research skills. The didactic portion of the program will consist of a two-week course entitled, The Kidney in Health and Disease, which will cover the physiological aspects of the kidney and the basic concepts of renal pathology. The mentored experience will include a year long research experience in the laboratory of a faculty member, with the goal of obtaining important research experience. Throughout the training experience, MD/PhD candidates will attend course work and clinical conferences, where they will receive an overview of many nephrology topics. In addition, the candidates will attend a series of lectures on a variety of topics in nephrology.
