AutoCAD 2019 is one of the latest versions of the application. Its feature set continues to evolve in the direction of an efficient, connected workplace for both architects and engineers. AutoCAD 2019 is built on a brand new platform based on a technology called Version Space. It is a system that helps to connect and sync your applications, data, and other relevant files across multiple computers. In a nutshell, Version Space is a technology that helps connect various applications and their data between computers on the same network. It acts as a central repository where data and files can be managed. The central repository holds a master file and is used to synchronize the content of all the other systems with it. With Version Space, you can now share the same drawing files across multiple computers. Other files such as the styles and templates can be kept in Version Space and synchronized across the network. The introduction of Version Space has changed the way Autodesk products function. There are numerous ways in which Version Space works and it will make Autodesk applications work more efficiently.
