20170816-21-recycler-bottles-as. 20112016-31-p4.en-us.aspx. Recyclers use bottles and cans to dispose of refuse. If garbage is not available or no landfill will accept the waste, the disposal equipment either recycles it or else burns it. In 2006 there were 7.1 billion bottles and cans produced each year. Almost 30 percent of them went into recycled containers or were burned for energy. With 7 billion bottles and cans produced each year the amount of waste is staggering. Not only does it take up space, contaminate the environment and end up in landfills, but it is also a real pain in the ass for garbage collection crews. That’s where recycling comes in. The chemical and physical properties of oil depend on the class of hydrocarbons present. Petrochemicals are usually derived from crude oil by processing. Crude oil may be associated with natural gas and is often found within gas fields. The earliest method for separating oil from the natural gas was the flare, which was a closed process. Here, hot gases and oil vapors were vented and burned. Although the process would produce enough heat to easily liquefy the oil, there was still much contamination of the oil, usually in the form of sulfur compounds, and so the process was not used for refining the oil.
