Clinical significance of marker-positive sentinel lymph node in breast cancer. We sought to clarify the prognostic significance of sentinel lymph node (SLN) metastasis using an independent pathologic-based cohort. Sentinel lymph node biopsy (SLNB) in breast cancer has been associated with a reduced rate of axillary recurrence. Because of the differences between SLNB and SLN, the impact of SLN metastasis on survival has not been fully elucidated. A retrospective cohort of 646 patients with breast cancer who had undergone SLNB followed by a completion axillary dissection for both SLN and non-SLN tissue was evaluated. Univariate and multivariate models were used to assess the effects of SLN metastasis on disease-free survival (DFS) and overall survival (OS). SLN metastasis was present in 37 patients (5.7%). Disease-free survival was significantly shorter in patients with SLN metastasis compared to those with no SLN metastasis (71.2% vs. 83.3%; $p = 0.011$). In multivariate analysis, the presence of SLN metastasis was an independent predictor of shortened DFS (hazard ratio [HR] 1.846, $p = 0.036$) and OS (HR 4.840, $p = 0.008$). SLN metastasis was associated with a relative risk of death from breast cancer of 4.47 ($p = 0.002$). Combined analysis of SLN metastasis and extranodal tumor (ENT) metastasis showed that the presence of SLN metastasis significantly increased the risk of death from breast cancer (relative risk: 2.63, p

Experimental studies on the susceptibility of mice to Theiler's murine encephalomyelitis (TME) in relation to their age. A study was made of the susceptibility of different groups of mice (6, 13, and 35 days old) to Theiler's murine encephalomyelitis virus (TMEV). The youngest group of mice were completely resistant to the disease while in the oldest group, the disease was fatal to more than half of the animals and symptoms very similar to those observed in clinical cases of neuroinfection by TMEV were seen. The Comparative level of methylnitrosourea toxicity in embryonic and neonatal rat brain and retina. Embryonic (E14) and neonatal rat brains (0-4 days postnatal) and retinas (1-4 days) were exposed to 5 or 50 mg/kg methylnitrosourea (MNU) by intragastric intubation during gestation and the resultant brain and retinal toxicity was compared to 10 mg/kg administered neonatally. The 50 mg/kg dose of MNU did not produce irreversible structural degenerative changes in the neonatal brain or retina after either one-time or multiple treatments, whereas the 5 mg/kg dose resulted in mild degeneration of neurons and glial cells and secondary degenerative changes in the brain and retina. When the adult rats had previously been exposed to 50 mg/kg of MNU, the newborn rats received the same dose. The present findings indicate that embryonic rat brain and retina are more sensitive to MNU than are neonatal rat brain and retina.¹⁴
