Human vas deferens cDNA coding for the cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterase were inserted into a eukaryotic expression vector and used to transfect a human osteosarcoma cell line. By Northern blot analysis we observed a single 2- to 3-kb transcript of the phosphodiesterase mRNA in these cells. To determine the kinetic properties of the enzyme, we expressed the recombinant human phosphodiesterase protein in E. coli cells and purified it to homogeneity. The expressed product showed similar cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterase activity to the human tissue extract. The Km of the expressed protein for the cyclic nucleotide substrate was 10 microM. The enzyme activity was enhanced by magnesium and inhibited by calmodulin antagonist. The cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterase was also inhibited by 3-isobutyl-1-methylxanthine and M&B 22577 and 4-substituted aminobenzamidozoles. These results suggest that the cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterase in human vas deferens is a type I phosphodiesterase. I have been a customer for almost 12years...i have to say that i have a great experience...they even replaced my air filter and my replacement was even better.....they are great!!! i would recommend them to 595f342e71
